June 26 was the topmost height of the Mars arc of out-of-bounds declination—the very day the Greek Prime Minister cut off negotiations with the ECB and called a national referendum. Tonight is that referendum;--with transit Moon at the midpoint of the Tsipras government chart's Venus and Mars for the

yes-no vote. Exactly what they are saying yes or no to the electorate is not certain, but yes or no it must be;--a snap choice between terrible alternatives.

The chart for the time the polls close has Sagittarius Lagna with the lord Jupiter in the 8th house of debt. Exalted Jupiter, overwhelming debt. The 8th Lord, Moon, is in the 3rd house, which is 8 houses again away from the 8th, showing debts piled on debts and the banks closed with capital controls.

The fifth house shows the party in power in a political chart; the sign is Aries ruled by Mars --“No”--in the 7th house. The government is urging a No vote. Mars is with the Sun in the house of sunset;-- the Prime Minister has said he will probably resign if the “No’s” lose.

The government's opponents in a political chart are found in the 3rd house. Here is the Moon looking at Venus—the “Yes” vote. Venus is in the 9th house showing the world community, which wants to see a new deal for Greece. But will the voters align with this?

The Moon separates from opposition to Venus, and applies to a trine to Mars, leaning to the “No's.” The “No's” have more firepower because Mars is with Sun and Mercury. If the “No's” have it, how painful the ensuing bargaining must be and that the government will probably be replaced anyway is suggested by the condition of the planets in the 7th house. Mars and Mercury are positioned in “marana karaka sthana”, their place of death-like suffering. The 7th house is the worst placement for Mars and Mercury.

Still a degree of hope is there because Mars at 0 degrees is being overtaken by Venus also at 0 degrees and so some new as yet invisible path to negotiations with the creditors will open up once the divisive referendum is over.

In the Navamsa the Moon is in the sign of the main chart Lagna, Sagittarius, aligning with the government. The emotional and principled choice is to stand up and fight against impossible austerity, as Tsipras is pushing for. But Moon also means a change. The current cast of characters cannot stay. Moon is having a sign aspect (see post on “Rasi Dristi” at www.satsirikhalsa.com) on Pisces where the Sun and Jupiter strong by house and sign suggest an ultimate return to more orthodox authority and to cooperation with the Eurozone.

On Monday this week Sun moves out of the turmoil prone nakshatra of Ardra and into Punarvasu, “The Return of the Light”. Some of the haze will clear and better solutions can be sought.

Here again is the chart for the swearing in of the current Prime Minister Alexis Tsipras:

Market View for the Week (not to be taken as investment advice—strictly opinion)

As noted last week, this week has emphasized Venus matters such as negotiations and financial liquidity. Besides Greece, China’s markets have been in turmoil and Puerto Rico has announced major debt problems. Venus is slowing down preparatory to turning retrograde July 24th, and slower planets force more attention. While braking and preparing to join the Sun on August 10, Venus now appears super bright and high in the sky at dusk and slowly falls toward the western horizon. For the next two months it will fall each night by 2% until on 8/10 it will set at the same time as the sun. The sun isn’t eating the planet, it just looks that way.

The SPX is now fairly oversold; after last week’s gap down on Monday it did turn up on Tuesday but the upmove has been weak. If it can overcome the news this week it may try to fill the gap, but then the likelihood is it will turn down again without making a new high, and continue lower into the Venus heliacal setting in August.
